

Old money parties hearty

WHILE the venerable firm of Lazard Freres has been going through some management crises lately, Wall Street is doing splendidly and there are still plenty of excuses to party.

So for Lazard Freres' 150th anniversary the other night, 400 financiers assembled at the Metropolitan Museum's Temple of Dendur. They got a solid hour of entertainment from diva Jessye Norman (who certainly doesn't come cheap) during dinner, then danced until the wee hours to the music of society band leader Bob Hardwick.
